Well, maybe this is totally unimportant for you. But I wanted to make myself heard.

Since I am not an american citizen, I do not have any constitutional rights to express myself in this matter. But this is as important to me as it is for any american. Microsoft is not an "american" corporation, it is an international corporation and most people working for Microsoft are NOT americans (some are as me, swede's. Not to mention all programers from India...).

Maybe you as americans, for once, should ask other nations what they think about Microsoft?

And just maybe you should try to addept to others, instead of trying to change those who think different from you?

Sooner or later your pride might be your fall, and that would truly be a sad end for a beutifull nation as yours.
